PASSED BY THE CENSOR

PHIL NASH, formerly a well-known Philadelphia newspaperman, died recently in New York. In other days, when the Evening News was still more or less a journalistic power in this city, Nash was assistant city editor. Associated with him were Moses P. Handy, John Paul Bocock, Charles Shull, Charles C. Wanamaker, Vincent Cook and others equally well known. Nash left newspaper work some thirty years ago to join the ranks of theatrical managers. When Keith opened his first Philadelphia theatre, the Bijou, on Eighth street, Nash was made house manager.

Nash, who was the stepfather of Mary and Florence Nash, the actresses, had the deserved reputation of being one of the "whitest" men in his profession. His generosity was proverbial and often costly. One Saturday evening he was greeted by a press agent with a hard-luck tale. The man had been out of work for four months, and had just obtained employment. Would Nash lend him his dress suit? Nash would. Would he also lend him a shirt and studs and cuff links? Of course, Nash did.

And Nash saw neither outfit nor the borrower to the day of his death.

KIPLING'S verse:
The east is east and the west is west
And never the twain shall meet.

is wrong, according to Randolph Hartley, a theatrical man, who has been in this city for a few days. Mr. Hartley was in Asiatic Turkey and Egypt last summer, and has a fund of interesting tales to relate. He was present at the opening of the first moving-picture show in Smyrna.

"It was an amazing audience which saw 'Samson and Delilah' on the screen. There were swarthy Bedouins, sleek Greeks, Armenians, Turks, Palestinian Jews, Syrians—in fact, some 30 different nationalities. They sat in breathless silence as scene after scene was unfolded. There was not a sound. They breathed in the atmosphere of the story, spellbound. What their thoughts and emotions were as they viewed being reflected on the screen, I do not know—I wish I did.

"Moving pictures have taken a tremendous hold in Cairo and Alexandria, Egypt, where Thursday afternoon in set aside as 'harem day,' when it is impossible for mere man to enter a 'movie' theatre. Only women, and more especially women of the harem, are admitted."

THE Philadelphia politician, of whom Shakespeare says in Hamlet:
A politician—one that would circumvent God.

is not always as bad as he is painted. Once upon a time the local Republican machine elected a Mayor who was subservient and obedient. In fact, he did so well that a morning newspaper began a crusade against his political iniquity. The fight waxed so warm that one day the Mayor threatened to have a warrant for criminal libel served upon the editor and city editor of the paper in question. But the city editor declined to be frightened by what he knew to be a "bluff," and he continued his battle, eventually winning victory at the polls.

Time passed. The boss, under whose thumb the Mayor had been, became very ill. He sent for the city editor.

"Old man," said the boss, "you and I have fought each other day in and day out; but you've been on the square. That — ex-Mayor threatens to do you dirt the moment I'm gone. I am going away for my health and I expect to come back in a coffin. Jimmie McNichol and my lawyer have in their safe a paper which would have caused you endless trouble. I have instructed McNichol that if that paper goes after you, to give you that paper for your protection."

Israel V. Durban went away and came back in his coffin. The ex-Mayor made no attempt to annoy the city editor, for he had heard of Durban's precaution.

IF YOU should happen to find a stray monkey do NOT send him to the Fifth District police station. It would not be altogether safe for the simian. And thereby hangs a tale.

Sunday afternoon a gorgeous auto drove up to the police station. A woman, resplendently gowned, was assisted to the door by a liveried footman. She went up to the lieutenant's desk.

"My pet monkey has been lost," she drawled. "Here is a description."

And when she had gone the policeman, who happened to have been born in Dublin, read the description, which wound up with: "Jimmie looks like an Irishman."

Which is why the Fifth precinct police are not enthusiastic in their search.

SHOULD the Kaiser die, which is inevitable, of course, he will be buried with imposing pomp and ceremony. It is different when Franz Josef of Austria is called to his fathers, the Hapsburgs. The latter's body will be taken in a simple coffin, by the most direct road, to the monastery of the Capuchins near Vienna. The master of ceremonies will knock at the gate, for there will be no one to receive the cortege. A voice from within will ask the identity of the visitor.

"His Majesty, Emperor of Austria, King of Hungary, Duke of Styria, etc.," will come the reply.

"I know no such man," will say the monk behind the gate.

Twice this will be repeated, then, for the third time, the Capuchin will ask: "Who is there?" This time, the master of ceremonies will reply:

"It is our brother, Franz Josef," and the body will be admitted—for the Emperor can only be received as a humble human being. A state funeral follows, as a matter of course.

EVERY time Dave Montgomery, the actor, sees the American flag, he bows low three times, pats himself on the back and utters various and sundry joyful exclamations. For when the war broke out Montgomery was in Paris. And here is what happened to him:

Delayed in Paris.
Three days on the road to London.
Thirty-six hours on the pier at Diappe without food.

Inability to get checks cashed in London.
Berth for which he had paid on the Mauritania sold to another.

Chased for days by a German cruiser.
Forced to pay his railroad fare from Halifax to New York.

Arrived in the latter city, Montgomery paid a social visit to a German barber.

"What you think of the war, yes?" asked the barber, razor poised above the actor's jugular vein.

"I—I'd rather not say," gasped the comedian, and the pathos in his voice was not simulated.

BRADFORD.

MISS DOROTHY THOMAS. Miss Thomas, whose home is in Riverton, N. J., is very prominent in amateur performances in this city.
